THANKS

I am overwhelmed by the loyalty of all you Disney fans out there, and by your outspoken and very welcome criticism. You applauded us when we did something good and never hesitated to chastise us when we did something wrong. As a result of your letters and phone calls, we have decided to explore new directions with our comics. Our new focus will be on collectors and kids.

For the collectors, we will be sticking with the popular, time-honored classic titles like Donald Duck, Uncle Scrooge and Walt Disney's Comics and Stories. All your favorite characters will still be found in those titles, along with all the classic Carl Barks material, as well as the usual gems that we find in our vast files and in the Disney Archives. These titles will appear monthly. Watch for more information on all that very soon.

In addition to the three monthly titles above, we'll be doing a fourth title that will be a special edition or mini-series showcasing new characters or featuring popular current TV or movie characters.

For the kids, we'll be creating new books in formats that are more accessible to kids or parents who don't go to comic shops or collector stores. Look for Disney's Cartoon Tales along with the new Colossal Comics Collection, a digest-sized compilation of exciting comic stories with many of your favorite characters.

We're also going to be doing some great hardback books featuring the most famous of the Disney characters, including Mickey Mouse. More on that soon.

We've got some terrific projects planned that we just can't talk about yet, but I think you're going to like what we're preparing for you.

So keep watching this column for information and announcements concerning our future publications in the months to come.

WALT Disney's AND COMMENTS AND QUERIES

Send to: Disney Comics, 500 South Buena Vista Street

Dear Editor —

Being probably the world's most devoted Floyd Gottfredson fan, I'm glad his work is returning to the pages of Walt Disney's Comics and Stories almost regularly.

I am overjoyed to know that "Mickey Mouse and the 'lectro Box" has definitely been scheduled. An enthusiastic "thank you" is yours.

The first pre-1949 issue of Walt Disney's Comics and Stories that I ever got was #52 from 1945: it printed a chapter of "The 'lectro Box". Since then, I've wanted to know the rest of that story, but since I've only got a limited budget, I couldn't afford the other chapters that I found, and only have one other chapter in my library now after six years of looking.

Now I'll finally get to read the first, third, and fifth chapters of Floyd Gottfredson's classic "The 'lectro Box!" I sure wish Walt Disney's Comics and Stories could be a permanent home for Gottfredson's work. May I please request a longer Gottfredson adventure in several parts?

While I think it was a noble experiment to try running a two-page text story again, I'd really rather that since you only have 26 pages of material every month that you not use two pages on them. I'd much rather see those spunky, beautifully drawn 1930s Gottfredson Mickey Sundays. By arranging your comic slightly differently you could print one in every issue, space permitting. If it permits things like "The Ghost of Ghost Town", I hope it's not just a shot in the dark to ask for Gottfredson Sundays.

Gil Turner's Li'l Bad Wolf tale was another silly yarn which I was glad to see reprinted.

The same feeling goes with #564's installment of "Bucky Bug". I have enjoyed the "Bucky Bug" stories from post-1947 issues of Walt Disney's Comics and Stories in your past issues, but when you print a really early story, that's cause for dancing in the streets.

Keep those great issues coming. You're in peak form and nowhere near running on empty.

Once you print Gottfredson Sundays, I just don't think your book could get any better.

Dear David —

You think we're in peak form now? Just wait until you see what's coming! The first chapter of "Mickey Mouse and the 'lectro Box" begins in the next issue of Walt Disney's Comics and Stories and the balance of the story will unfold over the following four issues, along with some other surprises that are sure to make you very happy.

As we redirect our comics to the fans and collectors, you can look forward to the following highlights in the months ahead:

- Walt Disney's Comics and Stories #571, on sale in March, will be a trial 64-page issue designed to give the Disney Comics fans and collectors a taste of what could be. If the reaction is favorable we may make it a permanent format. There will be several seldom seen, never-before reprinted stories and art that I just couldn't squeeze into previous issues! Plus: a one-page article on the awards presentation held October 22, 1991 honoring Carl Barks and others! Photos! Facts! And more! This is my opportunity to show collectors and fans what they could find in future issues of Walt Disney's Comics and Stories if they want it. But you gotta let us know!

- In Donald Duck Adventures #21, we'll be printing the much-requested "Golden Christmas Tree" by Carl Barks.

- In Uncle Scrooge # 263 we'll be printing a great new 20-page Don Rosa yarn entitled "Treasure Under Glass."

- And in Walt Disney's Comics and Stories #570 there will be a special, painted, pullout Valentine's Day poster, featuring Mickey and Minnie!

Dear Editor —

I've just started collecting Disney Comics on a regular basis, and I'm pleased to say there's no way I'm stopping. They're the best comics I've ever read! Your stories contain a certain type of reality which gives meaning to the plots, and yet never ceases to amaze children as well as adults. You know those other comics where the illustrations are too weird and the plot has no point? Well, I've always wondered whether those comics might be making children think that the world is like that. Then there are the comics that have ridiculous props, such as machines with hands. For all I know, kids believe that, also. Of course there're always the really serious comics, which don't contain one bit of imagination. That's why I like Disney Comics; they're not too serious and not too whacky, which makes them the perfect comics to read.

I collect Uncle Scrooge (my favorite), Walt Disney's Comics and Stories and DuckTales. Uncle Scrooge and the three nephews are my favorite characters. As strong and shrewd as Scrooge is in the world of business and finance, he still has that soft side which makes him the lovable character we all know. As for the others, they all contribute their own personalities, humour, love, science (Gyro), and screw-ups (Launchpad) to make each story memorable.
